Watermans welcomes second developer in relocation discussions

Watermans continues to look to relocate in order to support its future development plans, which see it playing an important role in the regeneration of Brentford town centre.

Watermans is working closely with the London Borough of Hounslow to explore two options with different developers: Ballymore, as part of the development of the South side of the High Street, and London Green who are looking to develop the Old Police Station site.

Both developers are including Watermans in their plans and we are confident that the constructive discussions we are currently holding will lead to a suitable solution to Watermans' relocation.

Jan Lennox, Director of Watermans, said:

'Relocation to a new building is an important part of Watermans' future plans. Watermans is the major arts centre in West London, with a quarter of a million visitors a year. We provide a lively cultural programme for local residents and visitors to Brentford, which would be better located in the heart of the town centre and in a building with greater capacity. This will allow for future growth.

It is encouraging that a second developer, London Green, is now involved in these discussions. It demonstrates the important part that Watermans has to play in the future of Brentford. We look forward to progressing these exciting discussions in partnership with the London Borough of Hounslow.'
